

Kopernik Global All-Cap Fund

SOFT CLOSE Q&A

MARCH 2017

Kopernik
Global Investors, LLC

Why is Kopernik soft-closing Kopernik Global All-Cap ("GAC") mutual fund?

Kopernik is committed to putting client needs first and to continue to invest in the best bargains we can find. We manage capacity carefully to enable sufficient investment liquidity, and to preserve our ability to generate alpha and potentially limit the risk of a permanent loss of invested capital for our clients. This means that we need to maintain the ability to take advantage of investment opportunities across different markets, countries, industry/sectors, and across the market capitalization spectrum. When mid and smaller capitalization stocks are bargains, we must be able to take advantage of those opportunities. Therefore, we have stated from the launch of Kopernik Global Investors that we intend to maintain a manageable level of the firm AUM (sub-$20B).

Additionally, it seems prudent to keep exposure per client relationship and vehicle to less than $2 billion for the Global All-Cap strategy. The mutual fund is being soft-closed at around $1 billion because we know how inconvenient a hard close can be for clients. We would much rather err on the side of soft closing too early than having to force a hard close on clients post a period of large inflows. (While this doesn't eliminate the chance of a future hard-close, it drastically reduces the possibility.)

Is there precedence for this?

Yes, we have a history of closing strategies at a much lower level than our competitors. At our predecessor firm (Tradewinds Global Investors), we often soft closed portfolios, usually at levels that many found to be unexpectedly low levels of AUM. Some were surprised, most were appreciative that we were protecting the alpha generating potential of the portfolios at the expense of personal profit. This continues to be a very important tenet for us at Kopernik.

What does this mean for clients?

It is our hope and belief that this action demonstrates that we place well-being of clients paramount. We are, of course, cognizant that this causes some inconvenience for clients, but are hopeful that clients agree that it is well worth the cost due to the enhanced alpha generating potential of the investment portfolios, and to the preservation of client's ability to manage future fund flow needs by minimizing hard close possibility. It also maintains the ability to invest in GAC through other vehicles. Importantly, in anticipation of the desirability of diversified capacity, we launched a similar mutual fund, Kopernik International fund (KGIX) on June 30, 2015. The International fund was launched in response to clients requesting Global Ex-US and/or a limited small cap exposure (generally, issuers with market cap above $2 billion). All four Kopernik Investment Strategies are driven off the same investment platform: philosophy, process, and people. We have no plans to offer any additional strategies in the foreseeable future. (See adjacent information on the International Strategy.)

Will the Kopernik GAC mutual fund ever re-open?

Yes, it could re-open if we experienced significant redemptions or if we determined that our capacity was considerably higher than previously assessed.
